Huston Starts New Movie

John Huston started work today at Pinewood Studios near London on his 25th picture as a director. This sequence of Charles Feldman's "Casino Royale," a Columbia release, also marks Huston's fifth screen performance as an actor. He also will share in the writing credits.

David Niven is the principal actor in this sequence. Deborah Kerr will play the wife of the head of the British Secret Service, portrayed by Trevor Howard. Huston's role is chief of the CIA and Charles Boyer plays superintendent of the French Surete.

Already completed are sequences with Peter Sellers, Ursula Andress and Orson Welles under the direction of Joe McGrath and Robert Parrish. Richard Talmadge is director of a unit specializing in action sequences and Jerry Bresler is co-producer.
